THREE CROPS OF GRAPES IN THE UPPER VALLEY

Las Cruces, N. M., Sept. 2.—Professor Fabian Garcia, head of the horticultural department at the New Mexico College of Agriculture and Mechanic Arts, reports quite a curiosity in the line of grape culture. In the experimental vineyard, there are a number of vines of the white seedless grape which produced a good crop. This week it was discovered that there was another crop of fruit which was just ripening and there are also many bunches of extremely small grapes which will make a third crop if frost does not strike here too soon. This is the first instance on record of a grape vine producing three crops in one season. The second crop which is now ripe, has as good flavor as the first and the bunches are practically as large.
